DAYTON, Ohio, November 27, 1968 --- Today's lay Christian cannot hope to survive on the education he had 20 or 30 years ago. The layman must accept his responsibility as creator of a new Christian community. On this premise the Catholic Interracial Council and the University of Dayton Religion In Life Series are co-sponsoring a three day workshop, entitled "Laity In Action", on Tuesday, December 3, Thursday, December 5 and Tuesday, December 10, from 7:30-9:30 P.M. in Kennedy Union, Room 310. A fee of $5 will be charged.

Mr. Mark Gibbs, director of the Audenshaw Foundation in Manchester, England which seeks to assist in the development of lay leaders, will conduct the three sessions. He will concentrate on the topic "Is the Layman an Underdeveloped Person in the Area of Creative Leadership?"

A layman and former Master of economics and history Mr. Gibbs is most experienced in the lay education of today's Christian. His book, "God's Frozen People" deals with the activities of a passive, silent laity in the Church.
